First Football style Kicker I didn't really know they kicked their finger's finger from the goal first. That's crazy. - Carl! Lloyd of Carl! Lloyd Men of the Pete Gogolak Blazers, who played for the Bills and Giants in the 1960s and 1970s, was the first NFL football-style kicker. Due to their success, all the other kickers eventually adopted their then unorthodox method, which involved approaching the ball from an angle rather than straight and using the foot step instead of the toes. Born in Budapest in 1942, Gogolak emigrated to the U.S. with his family after the Hungarian Revolution, and began playing football because his school in upstate New York did not have a football team. After playing for Cornell, he was drafted by the Bills in the 1964 AFL Draft. In his second year with Buffalo, Gogolak led the AFL with 28 field goals, hit all 31 of his extra points, and made the Pro Bowl. Because the football style of kicking improved the distance, accuracy and fluidity of the movement, he caught on. Before Gogolak, field goal kickers had been mostly burly men who played in other positions; soon, a new generation of kickers, many of whom were thin, quirky and European, began to appear in football. In the early 1970s, this change also caused an increase in field goals that led the NFL to move goal posts from the goal line to the end line in 1974. The native form of this personal name is Gogolák Péter Kornél. This article uses the Western name order when mentioning individuals.

[1] Gogolak is widely considered the main figure behind the adoption of the placekicking football style game. In 1966, after playing two seasons for the AFL's Bills, he joined the NFL Giants in May after throwing away his option, triggering the war between the leagues and effectively accelerating the subsequent AFL-NFL merger agreement in June. He is distinguished as being the first Hungarian to play in the National Football League. In 2010, the New York Giants announced that Gogolak would be included in the team's new Ring of Honor be displayed in all home games in your new stadium. [5] Innovation in place of a doctor, Gogolak came to the United States with his family as a teenager, after the Hungarian Revolution of 1956, and settled in Ogdensburg, New York. [1] He played college football in the Ivy League at Cornell University, where he was elected to the Sphinx Head Society and was a member of the Delta Upsilon fraternity. [7] With his roots in European football, Gogolak approached the ball at an angle and kicked it with his step rather than the then conventional straight approach, impacting with his fingers. [8] Not taken in the 1964 NFL second-round draft, he was selected in the 12th round of the AFL draft by the Buffalo Bills, bringing yet another innovation to the early league that became known for his experimentation. The unorthodox style that had made Gogolak remarkable while in college now made him the first style of professional football football (as opposed to the conventional kicker). In 1965, he scored 115 points and was selected by his peers as a Sporting News All-AFL player. He made 28 of 46 field goal attempts (60.9), and connected on all 31 extra point attempts, as the Bills repeated as AFL champions. Importance in the AFL-nFL Gogolak merger was also a key factor in the league war and the subsequent merger of the National Football League with the American Football League. Bills owner Ralph Wilson paid Gogolak $10,000 in 1964 and offered him $13,500 for 1965, an exceptional salary in those days, for a kicker. Opting instead for a pay cut to $9,900,[9] Gogolak was able to throw away his option, thus forcing the Bills to match any subsequent offer from any other team. A wealthy suitor was at hand: the NFL's New York Giants, playing in the NFL's biggest market, found themselves sealed with rookie kicker Bob Timberlake, who made only one field goal in 15 attempts (0.67) in 1965. Fullback Chuck Mercein also had two unsuccessful attempts and the Giants finished 7-7, four games behind the Cleveland Browns. The Giants' mediocrity could not be attributed to the lack of proficiency in field goals; the average margin in his seven losses was 21 points, and the closest was 13 points (for the Browns). Wellington Mara of the Giants ignored the owners' gentlemen's agreement against hiring players from another league, a deal that had previously pressured players' salaries and prevented inter-league competition over otherwise valued athletes. The only player to skip leagues had been finalwill willard deweall, who left the Chicago Bears after the 1960 season for the Houston Oilers of the AFL. Although the leagues have competed for new collegiate talent over the next five years, they adhered to an unwritten understanding of not signing with each other's veteran players. The desperate Giants, then playing at Yankee Stadium, whose late-fall winds sometimes rivaled those faced by Gogolak in signed the Bills star and Gogolak became the Giants' top scorers. As NFL owners feared, May's signing led to a sharp increase in similar similar by new AFL Commissioner Al Davis, bringing other NFL stars to the new league. Ultimately, this increasingly expensive competition for top players was a significant contributing factor for the owners of the two leagues to reach an agreement on the AFL-NFL merger on June 8. Part of the deal was not interleague negotiations, so the move of notable NFL players (Roman Gabriel, John Brodie and Mike Ditka) to the AFL was banned. Gogolak made 16 of 28 attempts (57.1) for the Giants in 1966, but they finished 1-12-1, the worst record in franchise history (and in professional football in 1966). Gogolak was introduced to the U.S. Army in January 1967; he had failed a physical examination the previous summer due to a spinal injury from childhood, but the patterns had been relaxed ever since. He appeared in only nine games in 1967 and retired after the 1974 season, his ninth with the Giants. After his playing career, Gogolak was a longtime sales executive for printing company RR Donnelley in New York, and resides in Darien, Connecticut. [12] Family He was not the only placekicker in his family; his younger brother Charlie played college football at Princeton and followed him to professional football, playing with the Washington Redskins and Boston/New England Patriots in a six-year career. [12] While with the Redskins, he graduated from George Washington University with law school. In 2008, Pete Gogolak's 36-year-old son David, a restaurateur, was killed in an avalanche while skiing near Whitefish mountain resort in northwestern Montana. [15] As there was no football team at the time, both brothers played football at the Ogdensburg Free Academy in Ogdensburg, New York, a small town on the St. Lawrence River along the Canada-U.S. border. He is a vocal critic of Colin Kaepernick and NFL players who kneel during the National Anthem. Gogolak is a Republican and longtime supporter of Donald Trump. The Giants' all-time highest scorer with 646 points, the Giants franchise records for most points after attempted touchdowns (277) and made (268) most PATs in a game (eight vs. Philadelphia on November 26, 1972) Held the record for most consecutive PATs at the time of retirement since it was broken (133) Held record for most field goals attempted (219) and made (126) at the time of retirement since it was broken See also List of American Football League players References ^ a b c d Kirst, Sean (January 23, 1991).
